AYER'S HAIR VIGOR.

For the Renovation of the Hair.

The great desideratum of the Age.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color and the gloss and freshness of youth. This hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied or decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a sticky sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling out, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a nothing else can be found so desirable—Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts longer on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy luster and a grateful perfume.

Concerning Chignons.

The monstrosities which the fell fiend of Fashion inflicts upon the feminine world, and the follies to which that deity inspires its votaries, have been the theme of satire and ridicule from the earliest ages. A recognition of "style," a desire to follow "the mode" in dress, appears to be an inborn characteristic of the fairer sex. Even the coal-black ladies whom explorers meet in the interior wildernesses of Africa have fashions of dress of their own which almost compete in ridiculousness with the latest Parisian modes. It is our firm belief that feminine fashions came in with the fig-leaf, and that the grand-daughters of Eve vied with each other in the size and arrangements of their leafy cinctures as sharply as do our modern belles in regard to the size of their paniers and the height of their boot-heels. So it has ever been since the fall of woman, so it shall ever be until the millennium shall restore the golden age to the world.

But while we do not ever expect, in spite of the efforts of Miss Bloomer and similar Quixotic individuals, to be freed from the slavery of Fashion, we must protest with especial energy and unction against some of its more grotesque and deforming inflictions. And of all of the monstrosities of fashions feminine, commend us especially to that of false hair, attached to the female skull by some device which the male kind is not expected to comprehend, and whose name, imported, like the abomination itself, from France is Chignon. So long as the aid of Fashion is invoked to add to beauty and increase its charms, there can be no objection, but when, as here, that power imposes upon women—part of whose business it is to be beautiful—a positive and disgusting deformity, it becomes time to protest. A woman's hair, naturally and tastefully arranged, is one of her greatest beauties, and poet and painter have testified from time immemorial to its value as an adornment. The have testified, too, to the ways in which it should be worn. Ben Johnson sings of and Horace, in his most famous ode, caps the climax of Pyrrha's fascinations by describing how she unbinds for her lover her yellow hair. Guido has taught us the inspiration of the hair in the golden locks of Beatrice, Cenci, and Raphael in the loose tresses of the Madonna. But never did poet or painter dream of the abomination of the chignon. That fashion has no origin or excuse in art. The Grecian Bend claims to be a reproduction of the classic pose of the Venus of Milo; but the chignon finds its ante-type in the fashions of female Hottentots and the negresses of interior Africa, who wear their greasy and matted hair in fearful and wonderful agglomerations upon the backs and tops of their heads. Les extremes se touchent, and our finest ladies of Avenue du nearly equal the belles of Central Africa in the extravagance in which the hair is arranged.

But the African beauties have the advantages over our lady friends in one respect. The Ethiopian chignon has the virtue of being made from the hair of the wearer, while the anomalous object which the fair ones of civilizations affix to their heads is made up of the stolen hair of others. The revelations which have been made in regard to the way in which the "switches," the "rats" the "chignons," and the other articles of female hair dressing are made up ought to banish them from any head which has a thimblefull of brains in it. To this delectable foot-ball called the chignon come contributions of hair in which the pediculus capitis—to use a term which will not shock the ear polite has had free range, and tresses cut from the putrefying corpses of the dead. The idea is horrifying enough in itself; but the teaching of science that hair of this sort when worn is fatal to the growth of the wearer's own natural growth of hair offers a further and more conclusive argument against the chignon. Away with it! It is an offence against beauty, it is an enemy of health, it is an offence against nature. Only the vanity and folly of fashion retain it. Let it be abolished! As the poet sings "beauty draws us by a single hair," but the woman who wears a chignon drives admiration from her. —Cleveland Leader.

A sharp old gentleman travelling west got a seat beside his wife in a crowded railway carriage, by requesting the young man who sat by her to "please watch that woman while he went into another carriage, as she had fits."

A scholar was turned out of a public school in Massachusetts, because he was "too old." He is over forty-eight, and has a family of grown-up children. He was ambitious, he said, to "catch up with his boys and girls."

An Indian Horror—Sixty Dakotas Burned Alive.

Your readers are more or less familiar with the name of Two Bear, the greatest Indian chief in this portion of the country, of the Yankton band of Dakotas. His party met with a great disaster a short time since. They were out on a hunt, and were camped at the head of Knife River. All day preceding the night on which the misfortune came upon them, they say the air was full of smoke, but, being a calm day, could not tell the direction from which it came. About midnight a brisk breeze sprang up, and before they could get out of their tepees, the fire was down upon them. It is scarcely possible to describe the scene of confusion that followed, or the suffering endured.

The fire consumed sixty tepees, and burned over sixty of the Indians, beside many of the ponies. Nine Indians have died, and there was a band of forty tepees out on the prairie that have not been heard from since the fire. Most of the badly burned, also the ponies, were left with this band. There provisions and blankets, in many instances, were entirely consumed, and their suffering in consequence are great.

Two Bear says the fire was worse than his fight with General Sully out at the White Hill. If the suffering was confined to the warriors alone it would not be so bad, but it extends to women and children. I saw one baby with its left hand nearly burned to a crisp, the fingers were burned off to the second joints, and the stubs or fingers were drawn back. The little thing could not have been more than eight months old, his face and head were also badly burned. It was crying bitterly, the mother mourning most pitifully. The sight was distressing.

Two Bear has gone to the Grand River Agency to see if he cannot get something for tepees, as the weather is quite cold, having frozen to the depth of an inch on barrels of water standing out doors.—Yankton Dacotian.

THE DEEDS OF WILBER FORCE.

"Come and sit near me, and let me lean on you," said Wilberforce to a friend a few minutes before his death. Afterward, putting his arm around that friend, he said: "Let us talk of Heaven. Do not weep for me; I am happy. Think of me, and let the thought press you forward. I never knew happiness till I found Christ my Savior. Read the Bible—read the Bible! Let no religious book take its place. Through all my perplexities and distresses I never read any other books, and I never felt the want of any other. It has been my hourly study; and all my knowledge of the doctrines, and all my acquaintance with the experience and realities of religion, have been drawn from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful enough, but they will not do in the place of the simple truths of the Bible."

Turning the Tables at a Wedding.

Near Foster's store in Cheatham county resides a well-to-do planter named Kenniff, who is the father of a beautiful girl of nineteen, the belle of the neighborhood. Two years ago her heart was won by a young man and the father opposed the match, the lover being poor. The lover urged his suit in vain, and as a last resort went to Virginia to see a rich aunt, and persuade her to settle enough upon him to enable him to claim the woman of his choice. Now, there chanced to be another suitor in the person of the son of another farmer of considerable means, who resides in the adjoining neighborhood. Him, the mercenary father favored. In fact, he looked with gratification upon the attentions received by his daughter from this source, and besought her to accept the young man's proposals.

Several weeks elapsed after the departure of the favored lover, and no letter reached her pining at home. The young planter, together with the father, so worked up the mind of the bewildered girl that she at last acceded to the demands of her parent. Arrangements were made for the wedding to take place at once.

The day arrived, and while the party were in waiting for the clergyman, a young man rode up to the gate, dismounted, and came hurried up to the house. It was the missing lover, who brought substantial proof of the generosity of his relative in the East. A scene ensued. The girl did not faint, but she gave the waiting bridegroom, who stood by, arrayed in a splendid suit of broad, such startling proofs of the affection which she entertained for her rival that he fled from the house. The father stormed a little, but was finally consoled. There was feasting in the house that day, and when the next arrived there was a wedding.—Nashville Banner, Nov. 17.

"Paddy, my boy," said a gentleman to an Irishman, whom he observed fishing away at a favorite pool, "that must be a fine stream for trout."

"Faith, and sure and it must be that same; for I have been standing here three hours, and not one of 'em will stir out of it."

"Bridget, how came you to burn the bread so?" "Och! an' is it burned it is? Sure thin, ma'am, but it's no fault of mine, for wasn't you out tellin' last thing afore you went out, a large loaf must have been baked, and I baked three hours just; for what else should I do?"
